Senior Deputy U.S. Marshal Anderson Fowler
J-Cell – Agent Jebediah

Senior Deputy U.S. Marshal Anderson Fowler
J-Cell – Agent Jebediah

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION: Lean, athletic build with controlled posture. Hair kept short, greying at the temples.

PHYSICAL DETAILS: None. 49yo, DOB 31 AUG 1966

SECURITY CLEARANCE: TS/SCI

PAYGRADE: GS-13

PERSONAL DETAILS: After 2001, Anderson remained within the Capital Area Regional Fugitive Task Force, but his role evolved beyond formal assignment. He works as a liaison across agencies, with information and requests routinely routed through him without official designation. Earlier in his career, a multi-year transfer to South Carolina removed him from the established structure of Mid-Atlantic operations. The post exposed him to environments with less institutional cohesion and fewer formal safeguards. Anderson does not rely on official channels unless they produce results anymore. He maintains parallel lines of communication through law enforcement, legal offices, and confidential sources, allowing him to move without attracting attention. He deliberately avoids advancement into roles that would formalize his responsibilities. Supervisory positions would limit his flexibility and subject his methods to review. As far as it goes at the moment, he influences outcomes without assuming visible authority, and that's enough.

His personal life reflects the same selectivity. He keeps his life compartmentalized to a degree that would worry anyone who noticed it, which fortunately almost no one does. His son gets a carefully measured version of him on weekends, and just distant enough to avoid questions he doesn't want to answer, while the rest of his time is spent maintaining a rotating set of relationships that never quite become real enough to threaten his control. The years in Carolina left their mark more than he admits, not in obvious trauma but in a slow shift toward cynicism and quiet opportunism, and by 2016 he has become the kind of man who justifies every compromise as necessary. Other relationships are maintained or discarded based on whether they interfere or not. Fowler does not believe the system functions as designed, but he also doesn't believe anyone can stop him from doing what he needs to do.

ADDITIONAL DETAILS: Anderson arranges involvement, access, and timing so that outcomes become predictable before action is taken. He maintains awareness of the individuals around him, including habits, pressures, and affiliations. He is capable in enforcement roles but increasingly delegates execution to others. His involvement is concentrated in preparation and coordination. Psychological profile indicates stability maintained through control of environment and information flow. Coworkers call him a control freak at times, but it hasn't resulted in a formal reprimand yet.

DEA Assistant Special Agent in Charge Darius Jeremiah Cruz, M.D.

V-Cell – Agent Victor

DEA Assistant Special Agent in Charge Darius Jeremiah Cruz, M.D.

V-Cell – Agent Victor

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION: Tall, well-built, African American man with a short cut and a stache. Maintains physical conditioning as routine. Presentation is professional but always looks like he is hiding grief.

PHYSICAL DETAILS: Left-handed. 49yo, DOB 28 JAN 1967

SECURITY CLEARANCE: TS/SCI

PAYGRADE: GS-15

PERSONAL DETAILS: Between 2001 and 2016, Darius transitioned from case-focused work into roles based on interaction with medical boards and interagency partners. This shift placed him in a position where he is expected to justify investigations rather than continue them. Darius mainly works where competing interests are present. He is capable of presenting enforcement actions in terms that satisfy legal, medical, and political audiences simultaneously. His medical background continues to shape his perspective, but it serves as a force multiplier in persuasion. He is able to frame enforcement priorities as public health necessities, often securing cooperation from institutions that would otherwise resist federal involvement. Between 2009 and 2013, he was assigned a HQ posting in order to obtain the necessary experience required to move further up the DEA career ladder.

Cruz is aware that not all outcomes align with his initial intent, 20 years ago. Cases are adjusted, delayed, or redirected to fit broader considerations rather than reaching conclusive ends. Unlike others in similar positions, Cruz has maintained functional personal relationships. His family remains present and engaged. Despite it all, there are hints that Cruz has been exposed to events outside conventional experience. His bubbly and outgoing personality stilled into something more of a clear-cut bureaucrat. He doesn't make jokes that often anymore. He does not appear to dwell on the implications beyond immediate effect.

ADDITIONAL DETAILS: Cruz demonstrates strong interpersonal control. He is able to navigate conversations with individuals ranging from street-level offenders to senior institutional figures without altering his core approach. He is perceived as approachable, credible, and persuasive. There are minor incidences episodic dissociation under extreme stress (noted as fugue-like states), though these remain infrequent and contained. He does not present as at risk.

CAREER HISTORY:

- June 1985: High School Diploma, Shaker Heights High School, Ohio
- May 1990: Bachelor of Science in Pharmaceutical Sciences, Ohio State University
- May 1994: Doctor of Medicine, Case Western Reserve University
- 1994–1998: General Surgery Residency, University Hospitals Cleveland Medical Center
- 1998: DEA Recruitment & Training
- 1998–2003: DEA Special Agent, Cleveland Field Division, Diversion Control (pharmaceutical investigations)
- 2003–2009: DEA Special Agent, Senior Case Agent; lead investigator on complex medical and prescription drug diversion cases
- 2009–2013: DEA Headquarters (Washington, D.C.), Diversion Control Section; policy liaison and interagency coordination with HHS, FDA, and state medical boards
- 2013–2016: DEA Assistant Special Agent in Charge (ASAC), Cleveland Field Division
- January 2024: Mandatory retirement under 5 U.S.C. Chapter 83/84 (ineligible for optional)

Senior Deputy U.S. Marshal George Elijah Jones
I-Cell – Agent Irving

Senior Deputy U.S. Marshal George Elijah Jones

I-Cell – Agent Irving

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION: Tall, heavily built Samoan with a bald head. Movement is controlled and efficient, though age shows in slower recovery and a more deliberate pace.

PHYSICAL DETAILS: None. 46yo, DOB 12 APR 1970

SECURITY CLEARANCE: TS/SCI

PAYGRADE: GS-13

PERSONAL DETAILS: From 2001 to 2016, George's role within the U.S. Marshals Service expanded through repeated selection for difficult assignments rather than political advancement. He remains positioned within fugitive operations, but his responsibilities extend beyond standard warrant service. Jones is consistently placed in jobs where coordination breaks down or risk exceeds planning. He identifies what needs to be done and does it, allowing others to align around that. He's somewhat of a "golden boy" in carrying out regional counterterrorism warrants in Northeast.

His family remains central and intact. His responsibilities toward his wife, son, and adoptive father are not in conflict with his work. He does not accept assignments that would compromise those responsibilities long-term, though he accepts short-term strain without hesitation. He has turned down opportunities that would remove him from operational work and reserve a comfortable desk for the rest of his life. He prefers direct involvement over oversight, especially after what he saw in Maryland that night.

George's coworkers do not attempt to interpret the rumors of him being involved in unconventional jobs beyond immediate operational impact. If something is dangerous, it is treated as a threat regardless of explanation, as long as George sees it so.

ADDITIONAL DETAILS: Jones is widely trusted for his decision-making skills. He builds rapport quickly and maintains it without effort. He is frequently used as an informal lead in multi-agency warrants despite not holding formal command authority. Others defer to him in the absence of clear direction. Psychological profile indicates resilience without adaptation.

CAREER HISTORY:

- June 1988: High School Diploma, Bethel High School, Hampton, VA
- September 1988: U.S. Army Reserve Enlistment – Transportation / Logistics Support
- 1988: Domestic deployment (329th Transportation Company, Fort Eustis, VA)
- May 1992: Bachelor of Science in Criminal Justice, Virginia Commonwealth University
- November 1992: Honorable discharge
- 1993: Tidewater Regional Police Academy, VA
- 1993–1995: Probation & Parole Officer, Richmond PD, VA
- 1995–1997: Patrol Officer, Richmond PD, VA
- 1997: USMS Application & Training (FLETC Glynco)
- 1998–2003: Deputy U.S. Marshal, Eastern District of Virginia, Fugitive Task Force
- 2003–2007: Deputy U.S. Marshal, Eastern District of Virginia, Violent Fugitive Apprehension Task Force
- 2007–2011: Deputy U.S. Marshal, Mid-Atlantic & Southeast Regions, Regional Task Force Liaison
- 2011–2014: Senior Deputy U.S. Marshal, Richmond/Norfolk, VA-Mid-Atlantic Region, Special Assignments (ad hoc)
- 2014–2016: Senior Deputy U.S. Marshal, Richmond/Norfolk, VA-Mid-Atlantic Region
- April 2027: Mandatory retirement under 5 U.S.C. Chapter 83/84 (ineligible for optional)

ATF Supervisory Special Agent Keith Alan Pike
H-Cell – Agent Henry

ATF Supervisory Special Agent Keith Alan Pike

H-Cell – Agent Henry

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION: Lean-faced. Mustache retained. Hair kept short, no longer strictly within regulation but close. Skin tone and complexion show minimal signs of aging. Presentation is consistently neat, with no visible decline in physical condition.

PHYSICAL DETAILS: Looks too young for his age. 44yo, DOB 09 JUN 1972

SECURITY CLEARANCE: TS/SCI

PAYGRADE: GS-14

PERSONAL DETAILS: Keith Pike could not leave behind the man he was in Somalia and in Maryland. The expectation for the next decade was that federal service would sand down the parts of him that were shaped by grief. Instead, it gave them a domestic setting. The language changed; the targets didn't feel different. He figured that violence does not need to be constant to be effective, only available at the right place at the right time. That understanding pushed him forward and settled into something quieter afterward. He does not chase it, but he keeps it within reach. Where he once worked beside a dog, he now works with people. The transition away from handling was not framed as loss, it is cleaner this way. One less precarious connection to this fragile life. There is a noticeable absence where hesitation should be. He does not deliberate in the way his peers expect. He reduces situations quickly, often before all information is available, and acts in accordance with that reduction.

His home life persists in a state that resembles the past as if observed from a distance. His wife's practice has calcified. Pike participates in the church as much as required. He attends, listens and leaves. There is no more weekend barbecues or game nights, only a lack of engagement that has become normal. Whatever gap opened between his friends years ago was never closed. His children remain the only space where his attention is not filtered through function. Even there, it expresses itself as protection and provision rather than presence. He ensures outcomes. He does not involve himself in the process unless necessary. There are no reports of misconduct, no formal complaints, no incident that would justify removal or reassignment. What exists instead is a consistent pattern of containment, and he does not appear interested in explaining himself.

ADDITIONAL DETAILS: Pike's perception of threat has not evolved into paranoia with time, but it has sharpened. He does not see danger everywhere, only in the places he thinks he should be pointing a gun at. Once identified, those threats are treated as inevitable rather than hypothetical. Others say that he no longer distinguishes cleanly between investigation and resolution. Colleagues describe him as reliable and direct, but they also describe a difficulty in interrupting him once he has committed to a course of action. Supervisory capability has given him room to operate to his fullest. There is no indication that he believes this is a problem.

CAREER HISTORY:

- June 1990: High School Diploma, Marquette Senior High School, Michigan
- September 1990: U.S. Army Enlistment as Military Police (K-9 specialization)
- 1993: Somalia Tour of Duty (UNITAF/UNOSOM II)
- 1994: Haiti Tour of Duty (Operation Uphold Democracy)
- December 1994: Honourable discharge
- May 1997: Bachelor of Arts of Criminal Justice at Northern Michigan University
- 1997–1999: ATF Recruitment & Training
- 1999–2001: ATF Detroit Field Division, General Casework
- 2000–2004: ATF Detroit Field Division, Explosives Detection K-9 Program
- 2004–2010: ATF Joint Task Force Assignments (Counterterrorism & Interagency Operations)
- 2010–2016: ATF Detroit Field Division, Supervisory Special Agent, assigned to explosives investigations and interagency task force coordination
- June 2022: Optional retirement under 5 U.S.C. Chapter 83/84

FBI Supervisory Special Agent Mariam Helena Khoury
D-Cell – Agent Diana

FBI Supervisory Special Agent Mariam Helena Khoury

D-Cell – Agent Diana

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION: Relatively tall and athletic woman with a prominent nose and a wrinkled Mediterranean facial structure. Ethnically ambiguous. Dark brown hair kept at a practical length.

PHYSICAL DETAILS: None. 47yo, DOB 14 NOV 1968

SECURITY CLEARANCE: TS/SCI

PAYGRADE: GS-14

PERSONAL DETAILS: Between 2006 and 2016, Mariam has remained in continuous supervisory roles within the Bureau without rotation out of high-pressure assignments. This is atypical. Her work pattern is erratic yet self-reinforcing. She retains cases past the point where most agents disengage. Situations involving prolonged uncertainty, unstable subjects, or incomplete explanations are not reassigned. She continues involvement until resolution is forced externally or the case becomes unmanageable within standard structures. This has altered her expectations. She no longer evaluates cases in terms of successful outcomes, but tracks progression toward failure. Targets are assessed based on how and when they will deteriorate, not whether intervention will succeed. Her management style reflects this shift. Subordinates are given direction without excess, and sometimes enough context. She assumes compliance and adjusts only when results diverge from expectation. There is no record of overt misconduct or protective oversight.

Her personal life is functionally absent. Contact with her son is extremely sparse. Her prior marriage is not referenced in current documentation. Existing relationships are minimal and appear to serve pragmatic purposes only. Her religious identity persists in structure. She retains the Orthodox framework of belief, but the function has changed. It provides order and repetition rather than reassurance. Observed behaviours indicate increased reliance on repetitive actions during periods of elevated stress. These actions are treated as necessary and are not explained.

There are unconfirmed rumours that Mariam has incorporated methods outside accepted investigative or analytical practice, including but not limited to torture and blackmail. There is no visible mechanism for release or recovery outside alcohol abuse, and she does not appear to expect one.

ADDITIONAL DETAILS: Mariam seems to be desensitized to violence and panic. She does not regularly exhibit strong reactions. This increases her effectiveness in crisis environments but reduces responsiveness outside of them. Her decision-making is deliberate and consistently pessimistic. She assumes negative outcomes and plans around them. Coworkers describe her as precise, incalculable, and difficult to interpret. There are rare outbursts of emotional volatility under sustained pressure. These incidents have so far not entered formal reporting.

CAREER HISTORY:

- June 1986: High School Diploma, Staten Island Technical High School, New York City, NY
- May 1991: Bachelor of Science in Psychology, Rutgers University
- 1991–1996: Licensed Social Worker (Adolescent Services, NY/NJ), specializing in at-risk youth and behavioural intervention
- 1996–1998: FBI Recruitment Pipeline & Quantico Academy Training
- 1998–2000: FBI Special Agent, New York Field Office (NYFO), Counterterrorism Division (post-probationary assignment)
- 2000–2003: FBI Special Agent, Counterterrorism Division (NYFO), Joint Terrorism Task Force (JTTF) operations and investigative support
- 2003–2016: FBI Supervisory Special Agent, Counterterrorism Division (NYFO), case oversight, interagency coordination, and high-risk investigative direction
- November 2018: Optional retirement under 5 U.S.C. Chapter 83/84
- November 2025: Mandatory retirement under 5 U.S.C. Chapter 83/84

CIA Intelligence Officer Michael Sajdak
G-Cell – Agent Galoup

CIA Intelligence Officer Michael Sajdak
G-Cell – Agent Galoup

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION: Broad-shouldered, posture held upright with visible effort, giving an impression of tension rather than ease. Facial features appear drawn, persistent fatigue is evident around the eyes and overall presentation suggests masking underlying strain.

PHYSICAL DETAILS: Left-handed. 47yo, DOB 05 JUL 1969

SECURITY CLEARANCE: TS/SCI

PAYGRADE: GS-14

PERSONAL DETAILS: Following the 2006 incident, Sajdak was reassigned out of his prior track and transferred to shifting European postings in Italy and Poland for several years. The reassignment was framed as a utilization of his regional expertise. In reality, it removed him from immediate proximity to ongoing domestic concerns. During this period, his work shifted towards structured analysis rather than high-risk environments. He was placed in positions engaging with sources, intermediaries, and individuals whose value could not be cleanly quantified. Sajdak began to rely on controlled interpersonal techniques that extend beyond standard tradecraft. These methods are subtle, repeatable, and used to guide conversations, extract information, and influence outcomes without overt coercion. Their application is deliberate and increasingly reflexive. They are not documented in official reporting. He does not seem to distinguish clearly between analysis and intervention anymore.

Upon his return to the United States, Sajdak was assigned to a new domestic posting under cover in Department of Corrections, as a contractor providing inmate radicalization monitoring at USP Canaan, Pennsylvania. His analytical workload from the real job continues in the meanwhile.

His personal life remains structurally intact and functionally absent. His marriage persists without engagement. Contact is minimal. His daughter remains the only point of consistent attachment, though his involvement is intermittent. His Catholic background continues to inform his thinking in terms of hierarchy, order, and an impossibility to file a divorce.

ADDITIONAL DETAILS: Sajdak is a cold and distant person, even for a veteran intelligence spook. He requires coherence in all of his workflow. Colleagues describe him as precise, intelligent, and increasingly opaque. His conclusions often precede his explanations. When pressed, he provides justifications that are sound but incomplete. He doesn't seem to understand that others often fall behind his explanations.
